REALISTIC ANGER MANAGEMENT

Five Simple Actions You Can Take to Minimise Your Anger Response

Introduction

If you're reading this guide, it tells me that you want to think, feel, and do things better.

Anger isn't just screaming and shouting... it's also something that can eat you up from the inside without you even knowing.

For many, anger is a default state i.e. their go-to in stressful situations.

When this is the case the body is always on high alert. In fight mode, stressed, tense, and uncomfortable!

You may not even realise exactly how uncomfortable your body has felt, because it's been this way for so long...

But the discomfort will be highlighted once we bring your body back to a state of rest, relaxation, and recovery i.e. the parasympathetic state.

However, currently, this is not the state you're spending much time in.

Most days you're either consciously or subconsciously expecting things will happen that'll piss you off... and of course you're always right.

The thing is, there is always a "reason" to be triggered when you're looking for one.

However, once the dust has settled you realise that the reason wasn't much of a reason at all.

Then comes a feeling of guilt, frustration, shame/embarrassment... which ironically, and unfortunately, can bring us back to anger.

FIVE SIMPLE ACTIONS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE
YOUR ANGER RESPONSE

Life is super tiring when living with anger. I know you, because I lived with it for many years.

The good news is that there can be an amazing, calm and peaceful life on the other side of it.

In this short, useful, and practical guide I'll be sharing:

MY PERSONAL ANGER JOURNEY
From Outer-Anger to Inner-Peace

WHERE DID IT COME FROM?
Understanding Your Anger

THE COST OF YOUR ANGER
Something to seriously think about

YOUR LIFE WITHOUT ANGER
Where to Find Your Calm

THE FIVE SIMPLE THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE
Your Anger Response

MY PERSONAL ANGER JOURNEY

From Outer-Anger to Inner-Peace

I was angry for a long time...

So long in fact that anger became a character trait of mine.

It was so bad that I could actually begin to feel the people who I cared about the most walk on eggshells around me.

It felt horrible, but the excuses I held for losing my shit still sounded legit to me so I didn't take any real steps to change it.

Anyone who has known me long enough can testify to my hot-headed short-tempered and sometimes violent nature.

Although I'm not proud of those days, I do not regret them.

I don't regret them because they led me to do the work on myself for the last 12+ years...

And now I get to share what I've learned with you, who may be in a similar position.

Admitting having an issue with anger was difficult, because the ego was strong but needed to be silenced in order to do so...

It didn't happen over night, but I knew for sure that admitting it was going to be easier than living with this anger. Easier than a lifetime of letting myself down, and those I cared about.

The moment I realised that my excuses were a way for me to avoid taking responsibility... EVERYTHING changed!

MY PERSONAL ANGER JOURNEY

From Outer-Anger to Inner-Peace

First came the conscious feeling of not liking myself because of all the times I had overreacted... It was a subconscious feeling before.

Then the shame and guilt when I realised how wrong I was in most (if not all) of the arguments I got into.

Then the sadness.

I came full circle i.e. my anger (as is most men's anger) started as a sadness that I didn't allow myself to feel at the time it was needing to be felt...

That same sadness ended as a sadness that I was forced to feel!

The strange thing is, the sadness actually felt good.

So fucking good... because I was finally able to feel the feeling I wasn't able to before/I wasn't allowing myself to feel before.

It's like that piss you've held in for too long. The relief you feel once it leaves your body is magical... know what I mean?

Trapped emotion once released is 10x that feeling... extremely cathartic, and feels like taking off a backpack filled with rocks that you've been carrying around for ages.

Yes, I agree – the sadness I felt also made me feel a little tender and fragile, but it also made me feel alive and begin to heal what I had compartmentalised for years.

Only when your anger is addressed, can it begin to leave your mind and body.

It makes space for peace, compassion, and understanding. The feeling of growth was so rewarding that it became a mission in life for me to continue.

REALISTIC ANGER MANAGEMENT

FIVE SIMPLE THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE YOUR ANGER RESPONSE

I have seen the anger in myself and the men I've worked with become a healthy emotion, instead of one that causes pain...

By healthy, I mean using our anger to have a masculine boundary of safety to protect us from people or situations that may cause us harm.

I see my anger as a beast... One that I have learned to tame. I love the beast as I know that it's here to help and not harm.

It was a different story when I had zero control of him (The beast). He rarely helped.

Taming the beast i.e. how we express our anger... is where the work begins.

A few things I learned on my journey:

1. Anger is a symptom, or a poor substitute for the real underlying emotion.
2. Anger hurts you more than anyone else (there's often someone else).
3. Anger is more likely to go unchecked until it turns into deep sadness and depression (like mine did).
4. Understanding the true cause of your anger is the most liberating feeling there is.

WHERE DID IT COME FROM?

Understanding Your Anger

Your anger stems from a need that wasn't met... and as I just mentioned, your anger is simply a symptom for a deeper issue.

For example: Sneezing and a runny nose are symptoms of a cold. But it's the bug that caused it.

So go deep to find the bug/the cause, because the cause may be needed to find your healing.

- You don't want to be in constant drama with someone over something.
- You now realise that you're overly opinionated about most things. If this guide is doing its job, you also now recognise how tiring that is.
- Your defensiveness was necessary at one stage in your life. It's a mechanism your psyche introduced to yourself to protect you...

Now as a grown man, you do not need to defend yourself against every situation. Not every disagreement is an attack on you.

Your anger is dominating you, it has convinced you that you are unsafe. It's so embedded that 9/10 times (if not 10/10) it's automatic. You have no say.

The question – when was the last time you enjoyed true inner-peace?

When there was no arguments, no daily fears of shit about to go down? But feeling calm, patient, fully in control and a genuine feeling of love for yourself and others?

It may have been so long ago that you're finding it hard to imagine a life like that, but this can 100% be your reality.

THE COST OF YOUR ANGER

Something to think about!

Your anger is hated by everyone around you...

And the thing is, if nothing changes, the path you're on will lead to significant problems. If it hasn't already, anger can cost you your peace, your health, and your relationships.

It can lead to lost opportunities to elevate your life, more regrets, and an utter dislike for yourself.

Sadly, this is not uncommon for many men.

I've seen men who, before seeking help, were on the verge of losing their jobs and families. Their lives were in chaos.

Some men still use their anger as a way to feed their ego. They like the fear they instil in others that comes with it... because it feels like respect.

People won't or don't feel safe around you, and you feel it. Unless you're using drink and drugs to numb what you feel to be true.

Do not let this be your story.

The longer you wait, the worse it can get. The more relationships you will ruin, the more pain you will cause to yourself.

Time, money, health, love, it can all be lost to not being able to tame the anger within you.

By acknowledging the costs of your anger, you will motivate yourself to seek change.

NOTE: It's not just about controlling anger today; it's about doing your future-self a favour and prevent more pain and suffering for future you.

YOUR LIFE WITHOUT ANGER

Where to Find Your Calm

Those around may not understand what it's like to have this uncontrollable emotion dictate so many of your responses to situations.

So stop trying to justify or explain yourself.

This is a personal journey that you will have to go on alone. Your actions will have to do the talking because you may have already broken all trust.

You will never find what you're looking for outside to you. No amount of therapy, coaching, or plant medicine can give it to you. Unless you go inward.

Looking inward means a Journey of Self-Discovery...

It means exploring who you really are, where your fears come from, and why you react the way you do.

Self-exploration MUST be done with love and compassion to shift the behaviours you wish you didn't keep repeating... Why?

Because it's the only way those behaviours will allow you to get close enough before the wall of "self-protection" goes up.

What I'm saying is - if you want to change, and become the man that your heart can genuinely be proud of without the egoic façade of confidence, you will have to be:

Open, honest, and be brave enough to sit with the discomfort that can come with being vulnerable.

If you're not ready, unable, or unwilling to commit to these three asks, then you may as well stop reading here and carry on as you were.

If you are ready to make changes in your life but changing how you've been living it, read on as 'the work' is about to begin.

The Five Simple Actions You Can do to Minimise Your Anger Response

Before we get into the 'Actions'...

I'd like you to try and imagine a life where you're not carrying around that weight of frustration or rage.

A life where you feel peaceful and are able to genuinely forgive those that hurt you.

Right now it may be hard to picture a life without anger when anger has played such a big part.

Trust me when I say it's possible, and when you achieve it... It's a beautiful place to be.

Not to say things won't piss you off any more, but the difference is night and day.

QUICK RECAP:

Your anger has a root cause... But this does not give you an excuse for it. It does however give you a place to start healing it.

Your anger needs healing because it's been caused by a wound...

The wound may be hard to find because your mind has buried it deep in both your mind and your body. Because of this, it needs to be approached slowly and with compassion.

THE LIST OF FIVE ACTIONS

ACTION NO: 1

Own it

Go on, say it out loud.

‘I HAVE ANGER ISSUES’.

Only once it’s admitted can it be addressed.

You have a fire in you and the trick is not to extinguish it, but to accept...
See how you can use it to serve you.

Think of it this way...

Everything has its opposite, including anger.

The opposite of anger is calm, peace, contentment.

Right now you’re often feeling that uncomfortable feeling in your body of irritation, frustration and impatience.

The physical reaction is your heart rate increasing, your muscles tensing up, are your temperature is rising.

The other side of this is an unwavering composure, a feeling of contentment with most situations.

I invite you to try something right now.

The following practice will help you enjoy a state of inner-peace and emotional stability by dropping you into a parasympathetic state.

REALISTIC ANGER MANAGEMENT

FIVE SIMPLE THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE
YOUR ANGER RESPONSE

PRACTICE:

Step one -

Time four minutes of slow conscious breathes:

1. Breathe in for Four seconds
2. Hold for Four Seconds
3. Breathe out for Four seconds
4. Hold for Four Seconds

This breathwork technique is called a Box Breath and its designed to regulate your nervous system and bring you into a present state of calm.

Note: This is really nice to do at the start of your day. Especially if you tend to wake feeling a bit tense and on edge.

Step Two -

Visualise yourself -in as much detail as your mind will allow - responding to something or someone thoughtfully instead of reactively.

Visualisation helps to train the mind muscle in preparation for most real life situations.

Step Three -

Now just sit for a minute and feel how this state of presence, calm and peace contrasts sharply with the intensity of your anger.

Imagine how it would feel navigating a situation this way.

Unbothered and in control... Like a man in his mature masculinity, poised and firm.

If you find this hard, give it time. You're building a new muscle... Like anything these things can take time.

ACTION NO:2 COMPASSION

This is the most important thing.

Compassion... For yourself and your anger.

I have already mentioned the importance of taking a compassionate approach to this part of you. Even though it has caused so much pain and you want it gone.

Your anger was born from a pain that you felt at some point in your life.

Maybe you were bullied, abandoned, felt unseen, unheard and unloved.

When these things happened, you were unable to stand up for yourself. You were not able to protect yourself and stop it from happening.

It may not have seemed like a traumatic experience at the time, but your body and soul was keeping score, and a wound was created.

PRACTICE:

Learn how to feel compassion by giving your younger self a hug.

It helps to get a photo of you as a child to find a deeper connection.

Here's where it gets a little weird and also quite emotional - Begin to say statements to your younger self like.

'I love you.'

'I'm here for you.'

'No-one will hurt you anymore.'

Say what you needed to hear but didn't. Feel yourself feeling the support and safety that you may have needed but didn't get.

ACTION NO:3 SAYING SORRY

Avoid being the kind of person that stays “strong when he’s wrong”.

Learn to say ‘Sorry’...

And do not follow this apology with a ‘But’.

This exercise is uncomfortable and extremely vulnerable because it removes all justification for your anger.

Apologies begin to break down the hard protective wall around your heart and your ego.

It forces you to put down your weapon and call for peace.

It’s also how to begin rebuilding trust when it has been said sincerely, and from a neutral place that wasn’t immediately after a display of anger.

Note: that your apology may not be accepted... and thats ok.

This practice is for you, and you can not determine how others will respond.

THING NO:3 SAYING SORRY

PRACTICE:

Step one -

Now take just 60-120 seconds of box breathing:

1. Breathe in for Four seconds
2. Hold for Four Seconds
3. Breathe out for Four seconds
4. Hold for Four Seconds

Step Two -

Make a mental or written list of all the people your anger has impacted. Even if it's the person who serves you coffee in the morning.

Visualise yourself - in as much detail as your mind will allow you to- apologising to these people, and accept that you had overreacted.

Step Three -

Now feel how this state of vulnerability feels in your body. Stay with this feeling until this vulnerable tender feeling turns into one of power and strength.

Imagine how it would feel dealing with a situation in this way.

Immediately righting your wrongs with a genuine heart-felt apology. Rather than a delayed regretful one.

ACTION NO~~4~~ THE MIND, BODY CONNECTION

This is a somatic practice called Progressive Muscle Relaxation (PMR).

It helps to reduce the physical tension that will accompany your anger.

When you're angry your muscles will tense up due to your body literally preparing for war...

It's important to do things that promote your mind-body connection to relate the physical changes in your body with emotional experiences.

In this particular exercise, you'll be able to enhance your relaxation response.

I would encourage you to practice PMR regularly, as it can train the body to enter a relaxed state more easily after you have been triggered.

It works by counteracting the body's stress responses. It also improves your emotional regulation.

You'll notice that by your physical body becoming more relaxed, your emotional state will follow.

REALISTIC ANGER MANAGEMENT

FIVE SIMPLE THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE
YOUR ANGER RESPONSE

PRACTICE

STEP 1 -

Find a Quiet Space:

Sit or lie down in a comfortable position in a quiet environment where you won't be disturbed.

STEP 2 -

Close Your Eyes and Breathe:

Take a few deep breaths, inhaling through your nose and exhaling through your mouth. Focus on your breath to center yourself.

STEP 3 -

Start with Your Feet:

Begin with your toes. Tense the muscles in your feet by curling your toes downwards, hold the tension for about 5-10 seconds, and then slowly release the tension. Notice the difference between tension and relaxation.

STEP 4 -

Moving Upwards:

Gradually work your way up the body, tensing and relaxing each muscle group. Progress from your feet to your calves, thighs, buttocks, abdomen, chest, back, hands, arms, shoulders, neck, and finally your face.

Hold and Release: For each muscle group, hold the tension for 5-10 seconds and then release it slowly. Focus on the feeling of relaxation and let go of any residual tension.

Complete the Cycle: Once you have tensed and relaxed all muscle groups, take a few more deep breaths and open your eyes.

ACTION NO:5 OUTSOURCE SUPPORT

Of course I'm biased doing the work that I do, but I also run a 12-week programme for those who are challenged with anger, and I have seen the amazing results first-hand so know that seeking external support is extremely valuable.

Plus, to this day I still continue to work with coaches and lean on other experts out there that keep me sharp and moving forward.

Taking a DIY approach has its benefits, and I would always encourage people to try to do it themselves first before seeking support.

However, you may be like the many who know themselves well, and are confident that their attempts will either be half-hearted, or totally fall by the wayside before they get started.

You may be one of those who work well with guidance and direction.

If I am speaking to you, then taking advantage of the amazing minds out there could be life changing.

Once you make the decision to seek help, it makes it a little easier to overcome the reluctance that has caused you to go around in circles with little to no progress.

Ultimately you're reading this because you want change in your life. It is possible but only with your commitment.

There's a time commitment, an emotional commitment, an energetic commitment, and quite often a financial commitment...

And if you're prepared to commit then I can promise you that there's an amazing life on the other side of your work.

REALISTIC ANGER MANAGEMENT

FIVE SIMPLE THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MINIMISE YOUR ANGER RESPONSE

SO THERE YOU HAVE IT...

That's Realistic Anger Management!

The five simple actions you can take to minimise your anger response.

As a recap, here are the five steps again...

1. Owning the anger: Acknowledging and accepting your anger as a valid emotion.
2. Showing compassion to yourself and your anger: Treating yourself with kindness to get understanding the root of your anger.
3. Saying sorry to those affected: Apologising and making amends to those who have been impacted by your anger.
4. Mind-body connection: Engaging in somatic practices to reconnect with your body and release stored tension.
5. Seeking external support: Reaching out for professional guidance or support groups to help you navigate your anger journey.

Once you apply these five steps in your life, you'll start seeing a profound shift in how you manage your anger and improve your relationships.

Instead of feeling overwhelmed by your anger...

You'll wake up with a sense of calm and control, knowing you have effective strategies to manage your emotions.

You'll be able to respond to situations with greater clarity and understanding... and start experiencing the freedom and fulfilment that comes from healthier relationships and inner peace.
